Visit the Rose Hill Museum Portrait Gallery

The Portrait Gallery located in the Rose Hill Museum showcases photographs and portraits of some of Bay Village's earliest residents.

A portrait is a photograph (or in some cases, a drawing, painting or sculpture) that captures a person or group of people.

Portraits were taken as a way to document a person/group's identity and importance or commemorate a special event, such as

Joel & Maragaret Cahoon's Golden Wedding Anniversary in 1881 (found in Portrait #10 in the Gallery; pictured right)

Prior to the invention of photography in the mid-1800s, a painted or sculpted portrait was the only way to capture the appearance of a person. With the rapid developments of photography throughout the 1800s, portrait photographs became more easily available to members of the middle class. Instead of spending a large amount of money and time to sit for a painted portrait, families could make an afternoon trip to a photography studio in the area.

However cameras weren't always used. Portraits were also done in chalk. The majority of the large portraits on the South wall in the Portrait Gallery are not photographs, but rather chalk drawings. Besides chalk - what types of materials can be used to draw a person's image?

Visit the Gallery to browse the portraits and take a glimpse into our community's past!

The Rose Hill Museum is open Sundays from 2:00 - 4:30, April through December.
